Ours is a multi-polar world, with many visible and invisible centers of power which shift constantly and whose strengths vary from one context to another. The two dominant centers of power still matter; through alliances and different patterns of influence they seek to maintain their position of supremacy. In a sense they are the principal operators on the international chess-board; but distracting voices are beginning to interrupt their moves more and more often. There is more disorder internationally, than order : International order is the hope and need of both developed and developing countries.
